Paul Wallace is in deep trouble. He's been arrested on suspicion of murder. His wife is dead, battered to death with a golf club, and it appears that he was the last person to see her alive. He was the only other person in the house at the time of her murder and there is no sign of a break-in. The murder weapon has been found at the bottom of the stairs and Mr. Wallace has no recollection of ever seeing it.

Detective Chief Inspector Reid believes the case against Wallace is incontrovertible. Wallace's business was failing and his wife was a wealthy woman with a successful business of her own. Wallace has a great deal to gain from his wife's demise. But Reid is in for a big surprise when the autopsy results reveal something surprising and the finger of suspicion begins to shift in a completely different direction. His watertight case begins to slip away from him and, although he is convinced that Wallace is the killer, as a police officer he is duty bound to follow the evidence, wherever it may lead. And he must also accept the outcome, no matter how much he believes it is the wrong one.
